

Several weeks ago my wife and I placed our names on the Indiana telemarketing no-call list. Before that, we were constantly interrupted - at dinner, during our family time, once even at 10:00 p.m. My daughter was 6 months old at the time, so that call was particularly unwanted. Since we have been on the no-call list, telemarketing calls to our home have diminished from 25-30 calls per week to 4-5 per week. As you can probably guess, this has made our time at home much more pleasant. We no longer have to leave our telephone off the hook just to avoid telemarketers. Therefore, any legislation that would lessen or weaken the existing Indiana law would be neither welcome nor appreciated. Please reconsider the passage of this proposed legislation, and let my family continue to have its peace.

Thank you
